The New York Times broke the bombshell news yesterday that the Department of Justice (DOJ) is currently investigating potential campaign collusion between Russian officials and the Trump campaign in the 2016 presidential election. The Times report has become the center of contention of the Democrats, where the majority of the party in Washington is claiming that there is nothing more than a “sketchy” conspiracy theory at play, and that the story by itself is not worthy of the “big-time” investigation the Republicans are making it out to be. This is a farce, because this investigation has been underway since early March, when FBI Director James Comey informed Congress of how much information his agency had compiled on the subject. In fact, Comey is the one who first referred to it as a “matter” last March, which the DOJ was then presented with, and was a possibility of federal campaign collusion. The DOJ then took the first of these steps into it, and is now sending the official letter to Donald Trump by the middle of this month. It is clearly underway, and the GOP are clearly accusing the mainstream media of using the story for political purposes of their own, and therefore, we should be wary of the Times. This is just another “nothingburger” story from what I have gathered, but the more the GOP and the White House try to deflect the issue at hand, the more the story’s importance will ramp up, especially in regard to the news made the other day by CNN on the subject. CNN’s Anderson Cooper and his lead reporter, Jim Sciutto, disclosed that the FBI last week finally received information that Donald Trump had at least two direct communications with Russian officials during the 2016 presidential election, in which he asked them to find out information on Hillary Clinton. And this new information has only escalated the question, one that was begun by Comey in his March 10th testimony before the Senate: “His behavior is... was weird... In all of his other contacts with foreign officials, and we have documented some of the others, [Trump] would often directly ask the other foreign official what that country’s position was f678ea9f9e
